ENDANGERED SPECIES BOOKMARKS

Golden-Cheeked Warbler

(Dendroica chrysoparia)

PHOTO COURTESY OF THE U.S. FISH AND WILDLIFE SERVICE

Protected at Fort Hood, Fort Sam Houston and Camp Bullis (Texas)

Habitat: A mixture of mature Ashe juniper, oak and other hardwood trees

Body size falls between 4.5 and 5 inches with a wingspan of 8 inches

Warblers eat spiders, caterpillars and other insects found on the leaves and bark of oaks and other trees

Use long strips of cedar bark and spider webs to build their nests

Listed as endangered on December 27, 1990

Front

Design provided by US Army Environmental Center

For more information: USAEC Public Affairs Office, (410) 436-2556

http://aec.army.mil

The U.S. Army is steward to 16.7 million acres of land across many diverse ecosystems. Because of the way the Army trains on and manages this land, these natural environments have become havens of plant and animal biodiversity. Currently, 172 of the more than 1,200 plants and animals federally listed as threatened or endangered are found on Army lands in the United States.

U.S. Army
Environmental Center
1-800-USA-3845

PRINTED ON RECYCLED PAPER

Back