ENDANGERED SPECIES BOOKMARKS

Greenback Cutthroat Trout

(Oncorhynchus clarki stomias)

Protected at Fort Carson (Colorado)

Habitat: Cold, clear dark upper area of streams and mountain lakes

Have the largest spots and the most scales of any other cutthroat trout

Up to 30 inches long and can weigh as much as 41 pounds

Get their name from the red to reddish-orange slash mark on each side of their throat

Listed as endangered on March 11, 1967

Front

Design provided by US Army Environmental Center

For more information: USAEC Public Affairs Office, (410) 436-2556

http://aec.army.mil

The U.S. Army is steward to 16.7 million acres of land across many diverse ecosystems. Because of the way the Army trains on and manages this land, these natural environments have become havens of plant and animal biodiversity. Currently, 172 of the more than 1,200 plants and animals federally listed as threatened or endangered are found on Army lands in the United States.

U.S. Army Environmental Center
1-800-USA-3845

PRINTED ON RECYCLED PAPER

Back