

ENDANGERED SPECIES BOOKMARKS

Bald Eagle

(Haliaeetus leucocephalus)

Protected at 32 Army installations across the continental United States

Habitat: Tops of large trees near rivers, marshes or other wetland areas

Nests are often reused year after year; some may reach 10 feet across and weigh as much as 2 ton (4,000 pounds)

Males measure 3 feet total and have a wingspan up to 6.5 feet; females are larger than males and have a wingspan up to 8 feet

White head and tail feathers appear after the age of 4

Listed as endangered on March 11, 1967; downlisted to threatened July 12, 1995

Front

Design provided by US Army Environmental Center

For more information:
USAEC Public
Affairs Office,
(410) 436-2556

<http://aec.army.mil>

The U.S. Army is steward to 16.7 million acres of land across many diverse ecosystems. Because of the way the Army trains on and manages this land, these natural environments have become havens of plant and animal biodiversity. Currently, 172 of the more than 1,200 plants and animals federally listed as threatened or endangered are found on Army lands in the United States.

U.S. ARMY
ENVIRONMENTAL CENTER
1-800-USA-3845

PRINTED ON RECYCLED PAPER

Back